A DREAM

I dreamed that I dwelt on an Isle of cracked ice,
In the midst of a lake of champagne,
Where bloomed the mint julep in meadows of green, Amid showers of lithia rain.

I reclined on a divan of lager beer foam,
With a pillow of froth for my head,
While a spray from a fountain of sparkling gin fizz, Descended like dew on my head.

From far-away mountains of crystalline ice
A zephyr, refreshing and cool, Came wafting the incense of sweet muscatel
That sparkled in many a pool.

My senses were smoothed by the soft purling song
Of a brooklet of pousse cafe That rippled along over pebbles of snow,
To a river of absinthe frappe.

Then, lulled by the music of tinkling glass,
From the schooners that dance on the deep,
I dreamily sipped a highball or two
And languidly floated to sleep.

And then I awoke on a bed full of rocks,
With a bolster as hard as a brick.
A wrench in my neck and a rack in my head,
And a stomach detestably sick.

With sand in my eyes, a grit in my throat,
Where the taste of last evening still clung,
And felt a bath towel stuffed in my mouth,
Which I afterward found was my tongue.

And I groped for the thread of the evening before,
In the mystified maze of my brain, Until a great light burst upon me at last,
I am off of the wagon again.

You know how it is yourself, ain't it?—Phoenix Republican.

A Fairy in the Old Violin

If ever there was a musical instrument which seems to have fairies in it, it is the violin.

It is light and graceful. It's "S" shaped sound holes are just the place out of which fairies might come when they can do the most good.

Its strings, touched lightly, produce sounds that are eerie, fairlylike. Even the bow, which slips backward and forward across the delicate strings, suggests the land of airy, happy little folk whom we call fairies.

And mamma in the big city of Chicago knows all these things. Also she knows how to get the sweetest of notes out of a violin.

So when mamma thought long and hard about her little boy from whom she had been separated for months and months, it seemed YEARS to mamma—she picked up her old Staud-ivarius, and paced up and down her little room, began to gently draw the bow across the strings.

And mamma became INSPIR-ED—she was playing for reasons that will inspire most anyone—her love for her boy. And her music brought results. For soon she saw floating in the air above her head, her little three-year-old son.

Of course this made mamma play all the better, and soon the old strad, was pouring forth notes that made all the boarders in the house gather in the hall to listen.

Mamma stood still, and looking lovingly at the image of her boy high up near the dingy ceiling, she played as she had never played before—even when she was on the stage earning her living by playing.

And she played as she saw the sturdy form of a broad-shouldered man; actually emerging as if from a cloud behind the boy.

In an instant her husband's face became plainly distinct in the dimly lighted room, and the boy was resting in his father's arms.

Mamma touched the strings again with a bow, and a shrill little voice spoke to her:

"We have come for you, mamma, dear," it said. "Papa and I are lonesome too—and perhaps we have been in the old violin all the time, just waiting for you to play music that asked for us.—Clipped.
